AACo. understands the importance of securing your intellectual property rights.

Today, being proactive rather than reactive is a business necessity, not an option, in an ever changing economic landscape. Leveraging the economic value of your most important asset—intellectual property—can propel you ahead of the competition, fund your research and development, and help you get to market and capture market share faster. Like a stock portfolio, it is important to understand how intellectual property fits into the overall business strategy of your organization.

AACo.'s Intellectual Property (IP) Practice Groups combines decades of litigation experience with a robust procurement and asset management practice to devise strategies that help clients protect IP assets while maximizing their value.

AACo. handles all aspects of intellectual property work including litigation, patent and trademark procurement, counseling, asset management, monetization, and licensing. Our IP attorneys assist clients in developing intellectual property programs that are predicated on and indispensable to the realization of primary business objectives and that, at the same time, minimize the risk of litigation. The firm's IP practice represents a broad array of national and international companies active in the electronics, semiconductor, communications, computer hardware and software, Internet distribution and operations, chemical, medical device, and biotechnology industries, among other technologies.
